The employment outlook for management consulting is positive. Independent consulting has become an increasingly attractive option for today's "self-navigators" of the job market—highly motivated people who want to assume a greater share of career responsibility. It involves specific sets of career skills and personal traits, such as a tolerance for uncertainty. The rewards can be substantial, but they come with certain risks.

The ACHE Chicago Health Executives Forum will sponsor a management consultant workshop with consulting professionals. Come hear their perspective on the world of consulting as a career choice and what it takes to be successful. Round table discussions with participating firms will add to your understanding of the field.
